General Retail

The 1800s

Small, family-owned, independent shops abound throughout the United States throughout the 19th century, notably by the 1880s. Many of these establishments were drugstores or general stores that sold everything from textiles to toys and tools.

During this period, people were also settling across the country and establishing new towns. It was not unusual for every community to have a mom-and-pop business selling everyday necessities (Meyer, 2019).

Thomas Rowlandson designed this poster, and Thomas Tegg published it on May 15, 1810. It was created using hand-coloured etching, and it features a merchant conversing with an elderly woman wearing a matching hat in each hand.

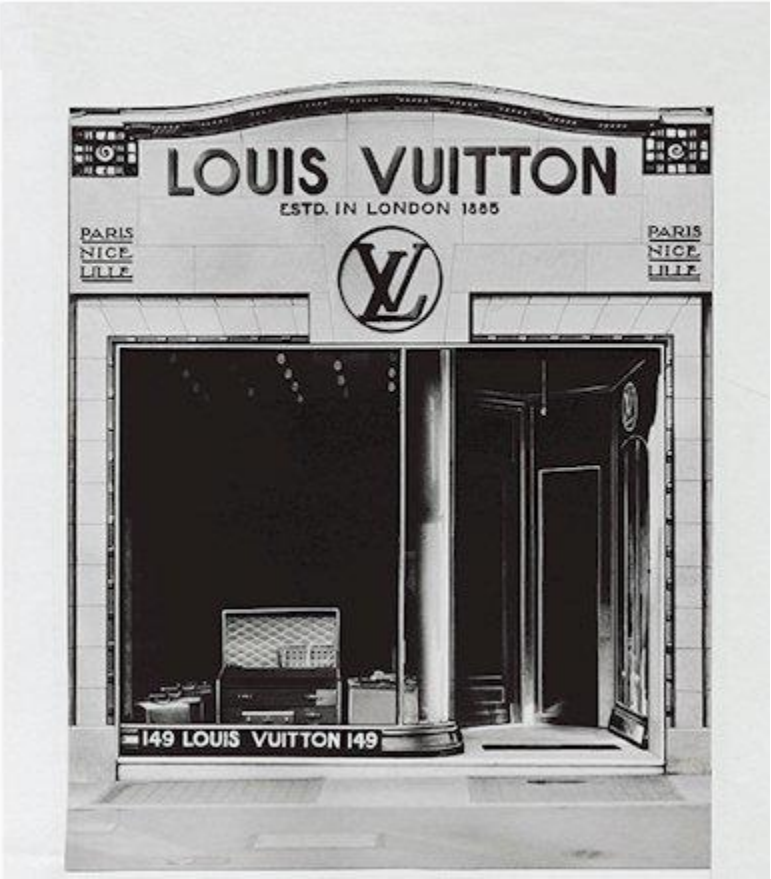
On the left, a youngster with a rattle stares up at them, a chubby woman with a bonnet sits in the middle, and a group of young women manufacture bonnets in the background. The shop has a lot of hat groupings hanging from the ceiling (Met Museum, n.d.).

Another innovative designer from the 19th century was Augustus Pugin, who created this magnificent red and beige thick linen fabric as a unique curtain pattern. It is one of the few printed, rather than woven, textiles developed by Pugin, and registered by Frederick Crace & Son on May 28, 1850. The flat design is particularly creative, combining floral shapes and trailing leaves with ogee forms and fleur-de-lis patterns influenced by medieval art.

Pugin was one of the first architects/designers to work in all areas of the decorative arts, and he saw textiles as a vital part of interior design. This cloth, which was registered as a furnishing fabric, was used in the interior design of Gawthorpe Hall in Lancashire and is assumed to have been presented in the Medieval Court at the 1851 Great Exhibition (Loom Fabrics, n.d.).

Four years later, the luggage brand Louis Vuitton was founded by the Frenchman himself in 1854. The first Louis Vuitton shop opened in London, England, in 1885.

Louis Vuitton's son, Georges Vuitton, developed the interlocking L and V as a method to trademark his embryonic box and luggage business, and it's become one of the most known logos in the world in the 120 years since (Yotka, 2018; logomyway, n.d.).



Lastly, in 1861, Bloomingdale's Inc, a posh department store business based in New York City, was founded by Joseph B. and Lyman G. Bloomingdale. Under the president at that time, Samuel Bloomingdale, it became a branch of Cincinnati-based Federated Department Stores in 1930.

Bloomingdale's started selling hoop skirts on Manhattan's Lower East Side in 1861, when the Bloomingdale brothers established their first store. The two then moved to its current location on 59th Street and Lexington Avenue in 1886. Shown below is their whole Summer 1890 catalogue, so one can see what folks were looking for back then (Jewish Telegraphic Agency, 1928).

The 1920s-1950s

Credit cards, often known as "charge cards," began to gain hold of the American shopper in the 1920s. These early cards, on the other hand, were mainly issued by hotels or small businesses and could only be used within such enterprises.

Unlike today, the primary purpose of a credit card was to eliminate the need for customers to go to a bank and withdraw money to purchase. Furthermore, the current notion of malls — which are physically built stores integrated in one area with community facilities — dates from the twentieth century.

Malls were frequently centred by a major department store surrounded by a cluster of other retailers. The mall was envisioned as a cultural and social hub where people might gather to not just buy but also participate in activities (Meyer, 2019).

The inspiration for Persil's most famous historical advertisement comes from the Berlin studio of well-known caricaturist Kurt Heiligenstaedt. In 1922, he was tasked with creating a Persil poster.

The White Lady is not a fantastical character, but rather the artist's 18-year-old partner. Heiligenstaedt and she went to Alexanderplatz to buy a white frock and then let her pose as a model wearing a Florentine hat and product box. Tin signs, posters, house gables, and street clocks will now bear the outcome.

With various sorts of women and fashion changes, the white woman has been the dominant advertising figure of Persil for many decades (www.persilarabia.com, n.d.).

Moving on to beauty companies, Boots was founded by John Boot in 1849. Jesse Boot, at the age of ten, assisted his mother in running the family's herbal medicine company in Nottingham, which was established as Boot and Co. Ltd in 1883.

Jesse Boot sold the business to the American United Drug Company in 1920. The corporation was then led by John Boot, the founder's grandson. In 1971, the name of the company was changed from The Boots Pure Drug Company to The Boots Company Limited (Bunn, 2019).

The initial 1937 'Number Seven' range was the company's response to the need for a high-end yet inexpensive beauty line. The series contained fifty years of beauty experience, with its distinctive yellow and blue art deco packaging. It was described as "the modern way to loveliness" and comprised of 11 goods. Number Seven Beauty Salons were opened in select stores, and specialist consultants were brought in to provide professional consumer guidance (MEDIAmaker, 2012).

Loveliness that outlasts the years + +

For more than fifty years, Boots The Chemists have been Toilet Specialists. To that experience, add the resources of one of the finest Research Laboratories in Europe and you have the reason why 'Number Seven' Beauty Preparations are the finest you can possibly buy.

For delicacy of skin texture; the soft, youthful bloom that is the real beauty, use 'Number Seven' the 'Modern Way to Loveliness.' Tired skin is freshened and blemishes disappear, contours are braced again to their original lovely lines. 'Number Seven' offers you all that you wish for yourself in Loveliness.

Another revolutionary innovator Frank McNamara, the founder of Diners Club, who presented an innovative system to pay for items in 1950. When McNamara introduced the proposal, he emphasized on what distinguished his card from prior credit card systems: it could be used at several establishments rather than one.

McNamara coined the term "credit card" to describe his device. The Diners Club card was comparable in this regard to several of its early pioneers, the metal charge-plates provided by department shops, gasoline companies, and other businesses at the time (Tsosie, 2016).

McNamara and his partner Ralph Schneider went to Major's Cabin Grill in February 1950. McNamara paid the check using the little cardboard card that is now known as a Diners Club® Card. This occasion was proclaimed the "First Supper," because it paved the way for the first multifunctional charge card in the world.

In the 1960s, the cardboard card was transformed into plastic and captivated Audrey Hepburn in the famous film "Breakfast at Tiffany's" (www.dinersclubus.com, n.d.).

A year later, Youngstown Kitchen released an advert for its line of porcelain steel cabinets and sinks. The business, which was founded in 1872, was bought by William H. Mullins after a decade. Mullins advertised their Youngstown Kitchen line as the best-selling steel kitchen cabinets among 62 rival manufacturers in the 1950s, through a state-wide network of showrooms and house salespeople. A used porcelain steel sink top and base cabinet, 2-new old stock whatnot shelves, a new old stock circular end shelving unit, and a new old stock General Electric Airliner range are all included in this collection (Mahoning Valley Historical Society, 2016).

THE 1980S – 1990S

The beginning of widespread online buying is perhaps one of the most significant flashpoints in retail history. Undoubtedly, many have gotten on the ecommerce bandwagon during the last three decades. Ecommerce makes buying more convenient and efficient by allowing customers to conduct research, read reviews, compare prices, and make purchases at any time of day.

The rise of ecommerce coincided with the rise of the internet. Individuals become more interested in purchasing in the digital world as more people had access to it. Some consumers were initially hesitant to provide personal data and financial information via the internet, but the invention of the SSL security protocol in the 1990s helped to alleviate such concerns (Meyer, 2019).

The first example from this era is that of the 1981-1992 WAL-MART logo, which first appeared in print as a rarely used variant logo. It was later used in portions of the Southeast.

Wal-Mart was using Antique Olive Bold in a lot of their advertising content at the time, so instead of enhancing their existing slab serif logo, they made a new one with the words "WAL-MART." On August 5, 1981, this logo was first printed (Logopedia, n.d.).

WAL-MART

A few years after the 1981-1992 WAL-MART logo was launched, Tommy Hilfiger founded his self-titled company Tommy Hilfiger Corporation with Mohan Murjani's (an Indian textile mogul) help, releasing his distinctive menswear range in 1985.

Hilfiger rose to prominence as one of America's finest homegrown talents in the 1980s and 1990s. In 1985, after enlisting the services of advertising and graphic designer George Lois to create a campaign to coincide with the premiere, the two decided on a massive billboard in the heart of Times Square.

Following their controversial choice to defy the convention of using models in advertisements, Lois and Hilfiger took an even riskier step by using the names of three of Hilfiger's rivals instead. The words were accompanied by the first ever graphic portrayal of the Tommy Hilfiger insignia.

With its nationalist colour palette of red, white, and blue, this was a logo that didn't just say "USA," but put the brand's American roots on emphasis (Wordsmith, 2020). Hilfiger's target customer at the time was middle-aged, middle-class European lads. When prep-chic apparel was adopted by hip-hop culture, Hilfiger branding was turned on its head. By 1994, Hilfiger was no more defined solely for a certain traditional demographic (www.outletshoppers.com, n.d.).

Reebok International Limited is also a well-known brand. It offers athletic footwear, gear, and accessories and is owned by Adidas. The name "Reebok" comes from the Afrikaans spelling of "rhebok," a kind of antelope or gazelle native to South Africa. Reebok is largely considered as one of the world's most valuable and well-known brands.

Joseph William Foster founded Reebok in 1895 as a standard shoe business. He had the brilliant idea of creating a spiked running shoe. Reebok's distinctive logo was developed in 1993. The design was put on the right from the original logotype in a lighter shade of blue than the prior version, consisting of two blue smooth lines merging into one and intersected by a red sharp and narrow triangle. The Union Jack was incorporated in the earlier version of the Reebok logo, highlighting the company's humble beginnings in Bolton, England in 1895. For the newer logo, the firm dubbed it as "the vector”. The "side stripe – cross check" hints on the product were the inspiration for the logo (famouslogos.net, n.d.).

Peter Eric Arnell (b. 1958) is an American designer, and the creator of the Arnell Group. He has designed products, branding, and campaigns for corporations such as Reebok. Arnell began his professional career as an intern for Michael Graves (adbrands.net, n.d.). In the early 1980s, he met Ted Bickford and the two worked on a series of publications about artists and architects before founding Arnell-Bickford. By 1985, the agency's annual revenue had risen to $4.4 million, thanks to clients like as Tommy Hilfiger (Linnett, 2002). Bickford departed Arnell in 1993, and the firm was renamed Arnell Group (adbrands.net, n.d.).

Another one of the retail industry's giants, Amazon, has certainly swiftly established itself as one of the most powerful brands. The firm was formed in Seattle in 1994 under the name "Cadabra" at the time. The name was altered because it was discovered that it sounded somewhat like the term "corpse."

Amazon started off by solely selling books digitally, which allowed them to develop swiftly, making over $20,000 per week in sales in only two months. They were able to develop quickly and become one of the most powerful companies in internet commerce as we know it today because they consistently invested their earnings back into the firm.

Amazon was chosen by Jeff Bezos because he wanted a term that started with "A" to appear first in alphabetical searches. He also loved how the name Amazon conjured up images of the Amazonian Forest and its wild and exotic aspect. He also wanted to highlight the fact that he possessed a library as large as the Amazon River in South America. Jeff Bezos sought a logo for Amazon that matched his ideas in 1995. He chose a blue base that resembled a river, a trapezoid that formed the letter "A," and the Amazon River or a woodland trail that crossed the trapezoid. A black and white variant, as well as a one-year-only "zebra" edition, debuted throughout the next two years. The desire to include the letter "A" in the logo was well-intentioned, but the concept was badly implemented (freelogodesign.org, 2018).

The 2010s-2020s

Retail businesses have found that social media prospects are both an opportunity and a new difficulty to overcome. According to current forecasts, 90 percent of firms will utilize social media for a percentage of their customer service by 2020. As an early form of advertising, Facebook introduced sponsored stories in 2011.

Marketers may use the massive quantity of data that Facebook users supply to target extremely particular clients. Facebook and Instagram are now platforms where companies can offer their items straight to customers. Overall, retail sales are increasing slightly. In 2018, sales in physical stores increased by only 3.7 percent.

Meanwhile, internet sales increased by 15%. Ecommerce sales have increased from 5% of the retail market share to over 15% in a decade. Customers want to purchase online, but not all ecommerce is made equal. Multi-channel strategies are being developed by brands (Meyer, 2019).

One of the most prominent companies since the past two decades (interbrands, n.d.), eBay Inc., is an American global e-commerce organization that enables consumer-to-consumer and business-to-consumer purchases through its website.

Pierre Omidyar launched eBay in 1995, and it quickly became a renowned website success. As of 2019, eBay is a multibillion-dollar company with operations in around 32 countries. The corporation runs the eBay website, which is an online bidding and shopping platform where people and companies from all over the world can buy and sell a wide range of goods and services (UNITED STATES SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION, 2019).

Marko is an isomorphic user interface framework that got its origins at eBay in 2012. Marko's early interest on performance stemmed from the clear correlation between website performance and e-commerce enterprises' bottom lines. Marko is still actively utilized today at eBay, which employs most of Marko team's core employees (Couriol, 2021).

Like Amazon, H&M, the world's second-largest fashion company, also opened an online site in the United States in 2013. H&M has provided online shopping in a few European countries, but in the United States, the only way to get the brand's ever-popular inexpensive apparel was to visit one of the almost 300 physical locations.

The firm has previously stated its intention to create an internet store in 2011, but management backed out due to logistical and security concerns. This failed attempt and the successful debut in 2013 serve as a reminder of how tough it is to operate a viable internet store in the United States. Serving a country like the United States, which is a large market with low population density, makes rapid and cost-effective shipping challenging. Fashion has its own set of issues for online retailers: because buyers can't determine if anything fits until it arrives, a lot of products are returned. Customers return up to half of all fashion purchases (D’Orazio, 2013).

Ingvar Kamprad, the creator of IKEA, was born in the Swedish province of Smland in 1933. Ingvar Kamprad founded IKEA, an acronym of Ingvar Kamprad from Elmtaryd, Agunnaryd, in 1943. The cheap costs of IKEA items challenged several Swedish furniture merchants in the 1950s (IKEA, 2021).

Packaging is essential for protecting items from the moment they leave the factory until they are unpacked by customers in their homes. " A packaging is also a carrier of important information and the IKEA brand," explains Erik Olsen, IKEA's Packaging and Identification manager. Olsen and his colleagues are aiming to make IKEA product packaging as environmentally friendly and cost-effective as feasible. According to him, a proper packaging solution protects the goods, but only as much as is needed to conserve resources - no more, no less. The package should also be simple to open for the buyer (IKEA, 2021). Plastics account for less than 10% of the entire volume of product packaging used by IKEA each year.

IKEA will continue to progress towards entirely utilizing renewable or recycled materials to close the remaining gap by eliminating plastics from consumer packaging products (IKEA, 2021).

On January 25, 1964, University of Oregon track athlete Phil Knight and his coach, Bill Bowerman, launched Nike, which was previously known as Blue Ribbon Sports (BRS) (O'Reilly, 2014). Dan Wieden, co-founder of Wieden+Kennedy agency, devised the now-famous slogan "Just Do It" for a commercial campaign in 1988 (Bella, 2018).

On June 30, 2016, Phil Knight formally resigned from his position as CEO and was replaced by John Donahoe (Turner, 2019). Nike SB chose a fresh direction in July 2012, after a long reign of the blue box.

The "Taped Box Era" felt like a reflection on the line's golden days (Wilson, 2019). Modern packaging's most significant elements are simplicity, sustainability, and ease-of-use, and Nike exceeds in every way. The most famous and modern Nike packaging is produced from recycled and recyclable cardboard, has clean, symmetrical lines, and is well-known for displaying the prominent tick (Design Packaging and Tape, 2020).
